The A++++ Plan: 100 ideas to ponder

17 October 2026. A list for thinking, not a plan. Nothing here is in TASKS.md, NEXT.md or any plan, and nothing is promised. Some may overlap ideas already done or listed; that is fine. Ryan picks what, if anything, moves on.

Every idea would still follow the house rules: original content, no dice wording, the engine owns the game, seeded and repeatable, no outside assets.

1. Out of the box

- 1. The booker's own body. You are a person too: stress, sleep, family. Burn out and your decisions get worse; take a holiday and the owner runs a show without you.
- 2. Kayfabe mode. Play a whole career believing it is real: no ratings, no star numbers, only what the crowd, the press and the people tell you.
- 3. The time machine. Start a world in any decade from 1950 to today: the tools, the money, the TV and what crowds want change with the era.
- 4. Booking from the bottom. Start as a ring crew member and work up to booker: set up the ring, then run the merch table, then become a road agent, then get the pencil.
- 5. The haunted arena. A building with a story of its own: legends who wrestled there, a curse on champions, a crowd that remembers.
- 6. Dream matches from the archive. Two wrestlers from different decades of your own save meet in a "what if" exhibition, scored from their peak.
- 7. The newsletter you write. Become the dirt sheet: a mode where you report on a world the game runs, and your scoops move the business.
- 8. The rival booker as a character. The person booking the other company has a name, a style, a grudge against you, and remembers every war.
- 9. Two bookers, one company. You and an AI co-booker share the pencil and argue over the card, like a writers' room for two.
- 10. Legend's last run. Play as a retired great who comes back as booker of a dying company that once made them famous.

2. Tycoon systems

- 11. Build your own arena. Buy land, choose seats, add a video wall, a merch store, a hall of fame wing; it earns on nights you do not run.
- 12. Merchandise lines. Design shirts, toys and video games for your stars; each line sells by popularity and fades when the star does.
- 13. Your own training school. A building with coaches, a ring and dorms; better facilities make better graduates and draw better students.
- 14. A TV studio of your own. Stop renting: own the cameras and the truck, lower production costs, sell studio time to others.

- 15. Pay-per-view to streaming to broadcast. Choose how to sell your big nights; each era of the business changes which pays.
- 16. Tour buses and travel. Plan the road like logistics: flights, buses, hotels, the cost of a long loop against a short one.
- 17. Sponsor portfolio. Many sponsors at once, each wanting different things, some clashing with each other and with your stars.
- 18. Buy a rival. Acquire a failing company: its tape library, its roster, its debts and its angry locker room.
- 19. Shares and a board. Go public; a board with members who want growth, profit or prestige, and a vote that can remove you.
- 20. Real estate on the road. Long leases on buildings in your best markets; cheaper nights, but you are locked in.

3. Leveling and progression

- 21. Booker levels. Experience from every show; each level unlocks a new tool, a bigger budget or a new kind of call.
- 22. Wrestler growth paths. Choose how each wrestler improves: in the ring, on the microphone, or in character work, and watch them become a different act.
- 23. Reputation by city. Each city remembers you as a booker, separate from the company: a good name in one town opens doors there.
- 24. A legacy score. Every career builds a score from titles made, stars built, money earned and moments remembered; compare careers across saves.
- 25. Hall of fame you induct. Each year choose who goes in; the ceremony is a big night and the inductees' friends remember who you picked.
- 26. Prestige for belts. A belt levels up with great reigns and great matches, and loses lustre with bad ones.
- 27. Show standing tiers. A weekly show that climbs from local to institution unlocks bigger guests, a bigger slot and a bigger budget.
- 28. Staff that level up. Road agents, writers and trainers gain experience with you; a coach you keep for years becomes a legend.
- 29. Mastery badges. Book ten great openers and earn the "Hot start" badge; badges change how the crowd greets your shows.
- 30. New game plus. Finish a career and start again with one thing carried over: a protege, a reputation, a grudge.

4. Skills and perks for the booker

- 31. A skill tree. Branches for business, story, people and production; points from experience, one choice at a time.
- 32. "Silver tongue". A better chance when you ask a star to take a loss or a pay cut.
- 33. "Eye for talent". See potential in free agents sooner and read the road agent's notes in more detail.
- 34. "Showman". Promos and angles you book land a little better with the crowd.
- 35. "Penny pincher". Lower production costs, but the crowd notices cheap shows sooner.
- 36. "Locker room's friend". Moods recover faster, but the owner trusts you less.
- 37. "Network darling". Executives are more patient, and bidding wars come more often.

- 38. "Ironman booker". Run more shows a week without wearing yourself down.
- 39. "Old school". Long feuds pay more; quick stories pay less.
- 40. Flaws as well as perks. Pick one weakness at the start (a temper, a gambling habit, a soft spot for veterans) for extra skill points.

5. Multiplayer and social

- 41. Head-to-head season. Two players each run a company in the same world, on the same nights, fighting for the same viewers.
- 42. Shared world league. Eight friends, eight companies, one week a day; the world advances when everyone has booked.
- 43. Trading talent. Players trade wrestlers, lend them for a show, or co-own a champion.
- 44. Invasions between players. One player's company invades another's show; both book their side of the war.
- 45. Co-op booking. Two players run one company: one books, one runs the business, both answer the owner.
- 46. Hot seat on one screen. Pass the controller between shows; a night of friends running rival companies.
- 47. Ghost rivals. Race another player's saved career in the same world: their results appear as a rival company.
- 48. Weekly challenge seed. Everyone gets the same world and goal each week; a leaderboard of grades and money.
- 49. Spectator mode. Friends watch your show on the air and vote in the chat room; the crowd's mood leans with them.
- 50. Fantasy draft. Start a league with a draft of every wrestler in the world, picked in turns.

6. Add-ons and new modes

- 51. Play as a wrestler. A career from training school to main event; you choose moves, promos and whom to trust, and a booker who may not like you.
- 52. Play as the owner. Hire and fire bookers, set budgets, and watch your choices from the top.
- 53. Indie circuit mode. Run tiny shows in halls and bars; no TV, all gate, and the chance to be the place stars start.
- 54. Women's company mode. A company built around a women's division, with its own history and challenges.
- 55. Tag team world. A world where tag wrestling is the main draw, with team chemistry at the centre of everything.
- 56. Tournament mode. A single-elimination or round-robin event, booked night by night, with a bracket you can steer.
- 57. Lucha league. Masks, trios, mask-against-hair matches and a culture where losing a mask is the end of a story.
- 58. Strong style league. Win-loss records matter, rankings decide title shots, and the crowd watches for respect.
- 59. Hardcore federation. Weapons, buildings that get wrecked, insurance bills and a crowd that wants more each time.
- 60. Documentary mode. After a career, the game cuts your history into a "documentary" of chapters, quotes and turning points.

7. The show and presentation

- 61. The dot-matrix match viewer. Matches play out as moving lights: entrances, near falls, a belt raised.
- 62. Entrance builder. Music style, lights, pyro, a walk or a run; a good entrance lifts the match before the bell.
- 63. The commentary booth. Two announcers whose lines come from the story; a great team makes a flat match better.
- 64. Crowd signs. Signs in the crowd made from the story ("We want the rematch"); the camera finds them in the replay.
- 65. Chants. The crowd chants for people and moments, from the history; a chant can tell you a turn is ready.
- 66. Replays and highlights. After a show, a reel of its best moments, kept in a library you can watch again.
- 67. The poster maker. Every big event gets a poster built from the main event, the city and the date, in the game's look.
- 68. A season trailer. At the end of a year, a short reel of the year's best moments in lights.
- 69. Weather and outdoor shows. Summer stadium shows with weather on the night, and the risk that comes with it.
- 70. Television graphics. Lower thirds, tale of the tape and title histories on the broadcast, all drawn by code.

8. Stories and characters

- 71. Gimmick changes. Repackage a wrestler: new name, new look, new music; the crowd may love it or reject it.
- 72. Real-life romances and breakups. Relationships backstage that the crowd does not see, until they leak or you write them in.
- 73. Generational families. Children of wrestlers come up through the school with their parents' names and grudges.
- 74. Factions with leaders. Groups that grow, split and fight for control, with a leader whose mood steers the group.
- 75. Masks and secrets. A masked wrestler whose identity is a secret the press wants; unmasking is a one-time moment.
- 76. Retirement tours. A star's last year booked as a farewell, city by city, ending on a night you choose.
- 77. Comebacks. Retired legends who come back once, for money, for a grudge, or because the crowd begged.
- 78. Managers and valets. Talkers who make a quiet wrestler a star, and leave with the money when they turn.
- 79. Shoots gone wrong. A promo that goes off the script and becomes real, with real fallout.
- 80. A story bible. A page that writes your company's history as a story: eras, heroes, villains, turning points.

9. The world and economy

- 81. A living industry. Companies rise and fold, merge and split, without you; the world map changes over decades.
- 82. Economic cycles. Booms and busts that change ticket prices, sponsor money and TV fees.
- 83. Wrestling's popularity tide. The whole business has hot and cold eras; ride a boom or survive a bust.
- 84. International tours. Take the company abroad, with exchange rates, local stars and crowds that want different things.
- 85. Working agreements. Lend and borrow talent with a company overseas; their stars visit, yours learn new styles.
- 86. Unions and contracts. Wrestlers organise; collective demands, a strike threat, and a deal that changes everyone's pay.
- 87. Regulators and athletic commissions. Rules that change by state or country: medical checks, blood bans, licence fees.
- 88. Scandals beyond wrestling. Lawsuits, a star's arrest, a sponsor pulled by a news story.
- 89. Rival media. A rival company's own dirt sheet, spinning stories about you.
- 90. Fan clubs and conventions. Fan events that make money, build loyalty, and let wrestlers meet the people who cheer them.

10. Modding, community and platform

- 91. Steam Workshop worlds. Share worlds, scenarios, story chapters and logos, with ratings and collections.
- 92. A scenario editor. Build goals, events and endings without code, and share them as challenges.
- 93. Storyline packs. Community-written storyline templates the sifting can use.
- 94. A modding API for events. Simple rules ("when a champion loses at home, then...") that modders write as data.
- 95. Season-end sharing. A card of your year (grades, best match, money) to share as an image.
- 96. Achievements with stories. Each achievement tells a small story ("The Night the Lights Went Out: kept the show going in a blackout").
- 97. Daily booker's puzzle. One card, one crowd, one goal, a new one each day.
- 98. Accessibility options. Text size, colour-blind palettes, reduced motion, a screen-reader mode for the menus.
- 99. Controller-first TV mode. A full couch experience: big type, a radial menu, the guide speaking on the screen.
- 100. A companion app. Outside the game itself (the game stays wide-screen only): check your company on a phone between sessions: the dirt sheet, the chat room, the mail from the owner.
